

Barrier-free building and living kom.fort e.V.

The interest in barrier-free building and living has grown. Not only senior citizens and disabled people want fewer hurdles, but also families with children or forward-looking builders have recognized the possibilities.

We want our homes to be familiar and comfortable, and we want to be able to move around freely and safely. For older or disabled people in particular, self-determined living space is a matter of life. Freedom of movement makes you happy and independent - and that's what you want at seven just as much as at seventy. Accessibility is therefore the better living concept - for life.

Basic information

The Senator for Social Affairs, Youth, Integration and Sport and the Senator for the Environment, Construction and Transport support the non-profit association kom.fort e.V.

Kom.fort.e.V. is an advice center that offers all citizens competent advice and information on the subject of home adaptation and barrier-free planning, building and living in a barrier-free exhibition.

The work of kom.fort e.V. is characterized by numerous offers and services such as support and advice in the planning and implementation of adaptation measures, both in a rented apartment and in one's own home, the discussion of current housing problems on site and the development of joint solutions, but also advice on all planning and construction issues as well as on costs and financing options and the mediation of competent partners from the fields of planning, construction and trade.